

CJ Goulding, Children and Nature Network

In his work with the Children & Nature Network, CJ Goulding trains, mentors and supports a national network of young leaders who are creating equitable access to nature in their communities. His work stems from his previous experience as an outdoor trip leader, community conservation crew leader, youth programs manager for the National Park Service, his Masters studies in Urban Environmental Education, and his overall passion for people, community, and leadership. He was featured in the Outdoor Industry's inaugural "30 Under 30" list (2016) highlighting game changers in the outdoor industry, and his essay "Why I Wear Jordans in the Great Outdoors" has been published in books and featured in culturally relevant outdoor curriculum all across the country.
