

Jody Kennedy

Jody Kennedy is the Public Involvement Planning Specialist for Colorado Parks and Wildlife (CPW). She engages people who live and recreate in Colorado in order to inform policy, planning and management decisions that impact Colorado's parks, wildlife and outdoor recreation resources. Previously, Jody worked as the Washington State Policy Manager for the nonprofit organization, Surfrider Foundation, where she led projects to conserve the Washington coast for both human enjoyment and ecosystem health. With over 15 years' experience, Jody has worked in several places across the western U.S. including Washington's San Juan Islands, Alaska, and Oregon advancing strategies to conserve public lands and other natural resources. Jody has a Master's degree from the University of Washington's Daniel J Evans School of Public Policy & Governance.
