

Scott Braden, Conservation Colorado

Scott Braden is the Public Lands and Wilderness Advocate for Conservation Colorado. A new resident of Grand Junction, Scott brings fifteen years of experience as a public lands advocate and educator. He has worked for the Colorado Outward Bound School, the Colorado Mountain Club and the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance. Growing up in Georgia, Scott was lucky enough to find his way West and work on the public lands that have been so impactful in his life.

Conservation Colorado is Colorado's largest state-based environmental organization, working to protect our air, water and public lands. Additionally, Conservation Colorado works to elect pro-conservation leaders and hold them accountable once in office. We work to translate Coloradans conservation values into policies and election outcomes, and have 27,000 members and activists from around the state.
