

Scott Linnenburger, Principal, Kay-Linn Enterprises

Combining academic and professional backgrounds in environmental restoration, trail/recreation development, and education, Scott has facilitated the development of more than 200 high community impact projects across the United States. Working with many communities that do not have ample conserved lands, recreation resources, and stewardship capacities, he has assisted groups in framing these as valuable community assets and the natural infrastructure that improves quality of life, economic resiliency, and local authenticity. Often without access to traditional funding inputs, the development of these projects have been forced into innovation and framing recreation/conservation as community development.
